Abstract: This article presents archaeological evidence of the Book of Mormon. It introduces the similarities between the religion of the Incas and Christianity, and a possible connection between the ancient Sumerians and the inhabitants of ancient America.
A. Hyatt Verrill, 72-year-old explorer, author, ethnologist, archeologist, artist, photographer, taxidermist, cabinet maker and farmer, has fulfilled the wildest dreams of red-blooded, movie-going youngsters. He has searched for sunken Spanish treasure in the West Indies, explored the dense jungles of South and Central America, made friends with savage Indians, discovered the remains of an ancient civilization in Panama, conducted archeological researches in Panama, Peru, Chile and Bolivia, and written more than one hundred books on a great variety of subjects, including his own experiences.

Before he settled down to a quiet life of puttering around his Anhialoka Gardens at Chiefland, Florida, he had tasted innumerable forms of adventure, tried his hand at many skills. No matter what subject I brought up in our conversation, he was certain to know all about it. When I complained about the mosquitoes, he began naming many of the insects in Florida by their scientific names. Later I sniffed at one of his marigolds and he did it all over again with flowers. When I finally got around to the subject of religion, he told me about the beliefs of every sect from the witch doctors and voodoo men of the jungle to the pastors and priests of elaborate cathedrals.

"Take the religion of the ancient Incas," he said after systematically disposing of a dozen other creeds. "In many respects the Incan faith was strikingly similar to the Christian. The Incas believed in a supreme all-powerful deity, in a son of that deity who could assume human form and who suffered, died, and was resurrected. They had a heaven or Hanak Pachak, and a hell or Hiek Pachak, which was presided over by a devil or Supay, and they believed in the immortality of the soul and in resurrection. Also they believed that Inti, the sun-god, was the offspring of the Creator or Kanak and a poor obscure woman."

Then he told me how he and his research secretary had pieced together history from the Holy Land and scraps of evidence from the ancient ruins of South America, linking the pre-Incas with the early Sumerians who lived around the Persian Gulf.

"This should support your belief in the Book of Mormon," he suggested with a slight smile.

He spoke of evidence which he had uncovered, indicating that the forefathers of the Incas must have come from Sumeria, south of the valley of Nimrod. This coincides with the Book of Mormon account which speaks of the Jaredites who were guided to America after the confusion of tongues and also began their journey south of the valley of Nimrod.

I listened carefully as he skimmed over the details. He spoke softly and fluently, treating the subject as if it were a classroom lecture. His words flowed so rapidly that I had difficulty keeping up with him.

Now and then I stole a glance around the room, which was a quaint combination of an adventurer's living quarters and a miniature museum. Stuffed birds roosted upon the furnishings, and strange animals poked their heads out of the walls. Paintings of South and Central American people and scenes filled up the vacant spots. The entrance hall was crowded with colorful American Indian headdresses, tom toms, medicine pouches, tomahawks and even a couple of shrunked scalps.

As Mr. Verrill talked on and my mental capacities raced frantically behind, he paused to introduce Mrs. L. Ruth Kohler, his research secretary and assistant.

"She had better finish the story for you," he suggested. "She has spent seven years collecting and compiling the data for me."

Mrs. Kohler scooped up an armful of looseleaf folders from a bottom drawer and invited me to pull my chair nearer to the light where we could see better.

"The story might begin with King Nuna who ruled in Sumeria several thousand years ago. Historians date his reign about 3100 B.C."

Reasons To Rejoice

Women and everybody who depends upon women for food and health (and that means all of us) have reason to rejoice in the publication of Mrs. Leah D. Widtsoe’s new book “HOW TO BE WELL.” It is a companion to the “WORD OF WISDOM,” that popular book written by John A. and Leah D. Widtsoe as an exposition of the famous Latter-day Saint principle of health. “HOW TO BE WELL,” used by every woman, is excellent health insurance. Its hundreds and hundreds of recipes and menus developed in harmony with the newer knowledge of nutrition and inspired by the “WORD OF WISDOM” will add to the health and physical well-being of all who trust women for their nourishment and health.

Moroni the Lonely

Having finished his task of abridgment, Moroni then proceeded to add another paragraph to his title page. This was a logical necessity. Thus we read:

An abridgment taken from the Book of Ether also, which is a record of the people of Jared, who were scattered at the time the Lord confounded the language of the people, when they were building a tower to get to heaven—Which is to show unto the remnant of the House of Israel what great things the Lord hath done for their fathers; and that they may know the covenants of the Lord, that they are not cast off forever—and also to the convincing of the Jew and Gentile that Jesus is the CHRIST, the ETERNAL GOD, manifesting himself unto all nations—and now, if there are faults they are the mistakes of men: wherefore, condemn not the things of God, that ye may be found spotless at the judgment-seat of Christ.

Having done this Moroni makes a statement that is thrilling with human interest and pathos:

Now I, Moroni, after having made an end of abridging the account of the people of Jared, I had supposed not to have written more, but I have not as yet perished; and I make not myself known to the Lamanites lest they should destroy me.79

There is a note of grim humor in the statement, “I have not as yet perished.” So he continued to write, we may presume, at various times and occasions as he felt inspired to return to the hill. It is passing strange that he did not add a third paragraph to the title page of the Book of Mormon after finishing the final statements found in chapter ten of Moroni. By the time that chapter was written Moroni had wandered alone some thirty-six years.80 And therein, lies an epic for some clever novelist or dramatist to exploit.

Gentlemen—or is it Ladies:

Enclosed please find a $2.00 money order to cover a renewal of a subscription to the Era for my wife . . .

May I add just a few words of appreciation for the Era, which has come regularly to me here. I’ve always enjoyed the Era, but its value has gone up considerably since I’ve been away from home. It helps to fill in for the many [things] we enjoyed at home . . .

lar among them. Both the Sumerian and Incan rulers also referred to themselves as the sons of the sun and wore the rainbow symbol as a mark of authority. The Sumerian royal clan traced their genealogy back to Noah who gave the rainbow to them, they said, as a sign that his descendants and the earth would never be destroyed by flood. The Incan rainbow emblem was associated with royalty who were descendants of those early Sumerians,” Mrs. Kohler believes.

She pointed to drawings of rainbow crests, explaining that they were found in various forms among both the Sumerians and Incas. She also showed me two complicated designs which were much alike. One was the Sumerian god Ishi, who was always pictured standing between two cat-like creatures and wearing the rainbow symbol on his crown, and the other was the Incan god, Mish, who also was depicted between two felines with the rainbow symbol in his crown.

Continuing with other evidences that strengthen the connection between the two races, she told about King Nuna’s five sons. One was named Prithu-Rukama which is simply the Sumerian way of saying “Keeper of the Golden Disk.” The disk was valued as a sacred and religious object. A similar golden disk, found among the pre-Incan remains, is now on display at the Museum of the American Indian, Heye Foundation, New York City. It also was treasured as a sacred symbol.

Another striking similarity is the sacred goose which was reverenced by both the Sumerians and the Incas. In fact the Andean goose is still considered sacred and is never molested in Peru today.

“When King Nuna was at the peak of his power, he erected great temples, built dykes and canals and sponsored granaries to hoard surplus crops. From his seaport at the head of the Persian Gulf he sent colonizing expeditions to all parts of the known world,” Mrs. Kohler continued with the thread of her story.

“It is significant that the Incas also built temples, dykes, canals and granaries of the same type. But even more remarkable, they were the only people in the New World who sailed seaworthy vessels at the time of the Spanish conquest, and their ships were similar in design to those found in the Near East!”

“In language and physical features, too, the Sumerians and the Incas were alike. The Quechua language of the Incan people has many words identical in phonetics and meanings to those of Near Eastern languages long since dead. And both races could be identified by their prominent hooked noses, if early engravings are any indication.”

But the most astounding piece of evidence which Mrs. Kohler has collected is a copy of a Sumerian linear inscription, actually telling of ships going to the western lands. Taken from a tablet on the tomb of Menes, who was a descendant of King Nuna, the inscription was translated by the late Lieutenant-Colonel L. A. Waddell of Great Britain. I copied part of it from her notes as follows: “The commander-in-chief of ships... the complete course made to the end of sunset land... going in ships... he completed the inspection of the western land... he built a holding (or possession) at Urani land... at the Lake of the Peak..."

Urani land was well known to the Incas as an island in Lake Titicaca, which was also commonly called the “Lake on the Peak.” The word Urani has the same meaning in both the Sumerian and Incan languages.

There are many strong links in the chain that connects the two civilizations, but Mrs. Kohler is saving the rest for a book which she and Mr. Verrill plan to write about their discoveries.

The material already has been checked by professors who declare that the evidence is infallible and a brilliant piece of original research.

Concerning the Book of Mormon which Mrs. Kohler studied as a matter of curiosity during her seven years of research, she told me emphatically: "I have no doubt that the Book of Mormon is a religious record of those early South Americans just as much as the Bible is a religious record of the ancient Israelites. In all my research I have not found anything which does not harmonize with the Book of Mormon account."

THE CONSECRATION MOVEMENT

Davis and Salt Lake counties, also made separate deeds. The shortest schedule I have discovered is that of Soren Andersen of Manti, which follows:

Household furniture          $20.00
Mechanical tools              10.00
One gun                      3.00
One sword                    3.00

Total                       $36.00

The longest schedule is that of Brigham Young, totaling $199,625.00, dated April 11, 1855. Because it will be of general interest it is reproduced in full. (See page 81.) In all probability President Young’s schedule as given in his deed of consecration includes a complete inventory of his possessions. This conclusion is supported by a statement made by Orson Pratt, April 7, 1855, in the tabernacle in which he refers to the fact that on the same day President Young had expressed the intention of consecrating "all that he has unto the church." The last item makes the following schedule of Frederick Rowlett of Brigham City unique:

One five-acre lot of farming land bought of William Davis in the Big Field, Box Elder survey, not numbered                     $ 50.00
One city lot in Brigham City and improvements                      120.00
Household furniture and kitchen furniture including bedding and clothing of all kinds, cooking and farming apparatus and utensils... 200.00
Also my daughter, Fanny Charlotte Rowlett, born in Geneva, Switzerland, October 26, 1844 A.D.                     $370.00

*From an enumeration by ecclesiastical wards October, 1853 (Jenson, Church Chronology, p. 49). There was no report for Tooele City. A statement reported. 251. An estimate of 300 for Tooele seems probable.

*No data available. The figure given is a guess. Cache County was not organized until April 4, 1857.

*Estimated. Thirty-eight original deeds are on file in the church historian's office mostly in surnames beginning with "B."

*Estimated. Minimum as indicated by the highest serial number on existing deeds.

*No data available. Those created in 1854, Summit County remained unorganized until 1861.

*Estimated. Eight deeds are on file in the church historian's office.

*No data available. Those created in 1854, Summit County remained unorganized until 1861.

*Estimated. The county clerk of Beaver County states that the recorder's office was first opened December 8, 1857.

*Estimated. Seventeen original deeds are on file in the church historian's office.

*Estimated. Four original deeds are on file in the church historian's office.
